

Prof. Eric C.M. van Gorp Department of Viroscience Erasmus MC Prof. dr. Eric C.M. van Gorp is an internist/virologist, heading the clinical working group of Exotic Viral infections [EVI] in the Department of Viroscience. The EVI group is involved in [translational] research in the field of Emerging [outbreak] viruses like Dengue, Ebola, Zika and the new coronavirus, COVID-19. His field of interest is the social and scientific impact of infectious diseases. He is founder of the Cirion foundation [www.cirion.net], initiating and facilitating initiatives and projects to promote prevention of infectious diseases. One of the initiatives is the EU supported international education and prevention project Viruskenner for scholars [www.viruskenner.nl]. The research line, with several PhD's, he is supervising is focussing on the emerging exotic viral infections, among which the haemorrhagic viruses and the role of citizen science [involvement of the public in scientific research], with an extensive (inter)national network in the Netherlands, the Caribbean, Suriname, Brasil and Indonesia. As a visiting professor he is appointed at the Airlangga University in Surabaya, Indonesia. He is supervisor of the Vaccination outpatient clinic/ Travel clinic and the Clinical trial unit from the Viroscience department.